1. The village of Dobříš is on the main road connecting Prague and Příbram. There is a military camp three km west of the village, well concealed in a wood. It is about four square km in extent. The camp consists of 30 wooden barracks, each capable of taking 60 men. During the summer there are numerous tents.

2. A rifle battalion belonging to the regiment stationed at Příbram occupies the camp. The battalion is 430 to 440 men strong. In the summer the rest of the regiment joins it at the camp.

3. During the summer of 1953 a training battalion was attached to the regiment. It consisted of reservists of the older years, learning to use modern Soviet weapons.

4. No heavy weapons were observed with the battalion. It is not motorized, even the train being horse-drawn.
